Specialized Program Descriptions

For the purposes of this directory, it is important to note that certain populations may require specialized program services in order to appropriately address their treatment needs. These factors should be taken into consideration when determining placement.

Women with Children

These programs are designed to serve substance-abusing pregnant and/or parenting women with specific pathologies and needs that have arisen in conjunction with their addiction. Treatment of women with children is more complex because of the problems presented by dysfunctional family dynamics, and because of this, the inclusion of children into the overall treatment process is warranted. In addition to meeting the characteristics of a specialized women's program, parental responsibility programs assess and treat women from a holistic, family-centered point of view. The services of these programs are designed using gender-specific, culturally competent treatment models. Parental responsibility programs are characterized by the following: parenting education and support services, as well as family therapy (for parents, significant others, non-resident children, etc.); child development and prevention services including basic assessment of each resident child's level of functioning; coordination of services addressing children's developmental delays and/or mental health concerns; child care provided in an environment which promotes developmentally appropriate socialization, language and communication skills, and gross and fine motor skills. In such an environment, "high risk" families may have an opportunity for unification; coordination of services establishing and maintaining public assistance benefits for herself and her children; child care services; early intervention and/or specialized education services designed to meet the developmental needs of the child; life skills training (e.g. communication skills, and budgeting and household management) that maximizes the client's ability to provide a safe, clean environment for the client and her children; comprehensive treatment planning integrating parent/child activities and basic child development care; a focus on gender-specific issues such as addressing emotional, physical, and/or sexual abuse experiences in the client and her children; educational programs that address parenting and child development skills (e.g. infant stimulation programs); a comprehensive service for children that includes a basic assessment, educational opportunities for developmental impairments, a physical and medical evaluation including a review of immunizations and a report of childhood diseases, and referral, if necessary; alcohol and other drug education for children, including age-specific children's groups to discuss these issues and improve coping skills; education in child custody issues; age-appropriate activities to encourage socialization and academic growth; and the treatment staff of these programs must be certified, and have documented experience in child development, age-appropriate child care, and drug and alcohol prevention and education.

Co-occurring

Mental illness often coexists with substance use disorders. Ere go, for treatment to be effective it must be designed to address both illnesses concurrently, and, if possible, in an integrated fashion, since each illness affects the course and severity of the other. Placement in an appropriately designed program will follow from adequate attention to the assessment of both disorders. The following principles should guide the treatment: treatment of both the mental illness and the substance use disorder should be integrated whenever possible (ideally, they should be provided in the same setting by the same treatment team); the treatment team must have professional resources available to ensure that adequate treatment of both disorders is possible (for example, the team should have psychiatric addiction specialists available, as well as other persons with both psychiatric and addiction training); all treatment team members should have some familiarity with the manifestations and etiology of both disorders to facilitate adequate coordination of treatment; treatment planning should be individualized to address specific symptoms of all disorders, while recognizing that treatment will usually incorporate a variety of therapeutic methods which may address either or both of these illnesses; there must be provisions to incorporate the use of psychotropic medications when indicated; and the personnel working with persons who have dual disorders will require training to enable them to understand and effectively address both mental health and substance use problems.

Adolescents

Adolescents who use alcohol and other drugs differ from adults in significant ways. While substance use disorders in adolescents and adults may have common biopsychosocial elements of etiology, they are different in many aspects of their expression and treatment. Treatment therefore must be approached differently and should be designed to meet the adolescent developmental and other special needs. Ideally, the treatment environment should be physically separate from that for adult patients. Strategies to engage adolescents, channel their energy, and hold their attention are especially critical. Treatment must address the nuances of adolescent experience, including cognitive, emotional, physical, social, and more development, in addition to involvement with alcohol and other drugs.

Pharmacotherapy

Pharmacotherapy is a comprehensive treatment approach, requiring licensure, FDA, DEA, and PA Department of Health approval, where medication and comprehensive therapy and medical services are utilized for treatment of opiate addicted clients. Pharmacotherapies are safe and necessary pharmacological supports to control compulsive drug seeking behavior for chronic narcotic IV and other opiate-abusing clients. Medication can be either agonist (i.e. methadone, LAAM, etc.) or antagonist (Trexan, naltrexone, etc.), providing pharmacologic support to clients while they undergo structured specialized therapy and medical services.

YADAC only funds the Standard Level of pharmacotherapy in the 1A Outpatient setting. At the Standard Level, it is assumed that the patient can sustain him or herself, although he or she would likely not benefit from treatment without the service. The facility provides the pharmacotherapy in addition to psychotherapy for 2+ hours a month.

ASAM Level 3.5 (Adolescent): Clinically Managed Medium-Intensity Residential Services Description and Provider Listing

Programs designed to serve individuals who, because of specific functional limitations, need safe and stable living environments in order to develop and/or demonstrate sufficient recovery skills so that they do not immediately relapse or continue to use in an imminently dangerous manner upon transfer to a less intensive level of care. These programs assist individuals whose SUD is currently so out of control that they need a 24-hour supportive treatment environment to initiate or continue a recovery process that has failed to progress. Adolescent residential services may specialize in the care of individuals who are involved in the juvenile justice system and whose problems include delinquency and juvenile justice involvement.

ASAM Level 3.7 WM: Medically Monitored Inpatient Detoxification Description and Provider Listing

A residential facility that provides a 24-hour professionally directed evaluation and detoxification of addicted clients. Detoxification is the process whereby a drug- or alcohol-intoxicated or dependent client is assisted through the period of time required to eliminate the presence of the intoxicating substance (by metabolic or other means) and any other dependency factors while keeping the physiological and psychological risk to the client at a minimum. This process should also include efforts to motivate and support the client to seek formal treatment after the detoxification process. This type of care utilizes multi-disciplinary personnel for clients whose withdrawal problems (with or without biomedical and/or emotional problems) are severe enough to require inpatient services, 24-hour observation, monitoring, and, usually, medication. However, the full resources of an acute care general hospital or a medically managed intensive inpatient treatment system are not necessary. This treatment is specific to psychoactive substance use.

Prevention Services Description and Provider Listing

Prevention involves a proactive process that empowers individuals and systems to deal constructively with potentially difficult life situations, to keep healthy people healthy and to bolster the strength of those at risk. It requires that a measurable, risk-based series of collaborative and culturally relevant strategies be employed to preclude or reduce those uses of drugs and alcohol that have a negative impact on the individual, the family, and the larger society. Negative impact includes the physical, mental, or social consequences that result in the reduction of optimum functioning at home, in school, at work, or in the community. Positive behaviors are defined as those which include increased self- understanding, improved interpersonal and human relations skills, enhanced ability to relate to social institutions, and effective coping behaviors to deal with stress. Prevention activities are targeted at the total populations, with an emphasis on delivering appropriate services prior to the manifestation of inappropriate behaviors. Prevention activities can be delivered through schools, media, family or community agencies and groups.
